« Où est le St-Laurent, mon fleuve ? Il est là. On ne l'entend pas. Il est comme le cheval qui attend dans l'écurie. On ne le voit pas. Mais je sens qu'il est là, qu'il coule en faisant semblant de ne pas couler, qu'il embrasse la ville... »

'Le nez qui voque', Réjean Ducharme, (Gallimard, 1967)

"Griffintown." Eileen's teeth were chattering as she crawled onto the makeshift raft, then, remembering a hotel mentioned in the Irish Canadian, she said, "I'm looking for the Old Countryman's Inn."

"Oh, la," said the woman, "en bas. Down on the quays. It will be murderous there . . . vous avez besoin d'un bateau. But I will take you part way."

The whole population of the city had moved, depending on its location and elevation, one or two or several feet skywards. Business was being conducted from second-storey windows. Wooden sidewalks, chained to front doorsteps, were being used as landing docks, or, in some cases, as parlours where people in rocking chairs sat smoking and chatting in the sun. Small boats were rowed in and out of large ground-floor windows. A cabinet full of broken china swept majestically towards an intersection Eileen and the woman were approaching, and had to be poled out of the way. Heading in the opposite direction, his long ears floating on the surface of the brown water, a dog

« Nous pensons souvent l'eau comme un produit. Nous oublions que c'est un milieu vivant et que nous faisons partie de cet écosystème. Nous sommes faits à 70% d'eau et 45% des Québécois boivent l'eau du fleuve. Il n'y a pas de frontière entre l'écosystème du Saint-Laurent et notre organisme. Son eau coule dans nos veines »

Water management in the city is a complex task. The city of Rotterdam has developed a water management strategy that focuses on water storage, treatment, and distribution. This strategy is based on the principle of 'water as a resource' and aims to ensure that the city has enough water to meet its needs, even in the event of a drought.

The water feature is designed to provide a cooling effect in the city and to provide a source of water for the city's residents. It is also designed to be a source of inspiration for the city's residents and to provide a source of water for the city's residents.
